P3 walkthrough: the kontrolafgift dispute

This is a walkthrough of P3, the part of our project where a passenger disputes a fine (kontrolafgift). It's the process we modelled in DCR. It starts when someone complains to Movia about a fine, and it ends once Movia, or Ankenævnet if it gets that far, has decided and the decision has been carried out.

Quick DCR refresher

We all know DCR from the course, so here's the short version. The model doesn't draw an order of steps. It draws rules between activities, and anything the rules don't block is allowed. Five relations do all the work:

Relation	Read it as	Example from P3
A ->* B (condition)	B can't happen before A has happened	The case can't go to the board before there's been a party hearing
A *-> B (response)	After A, B is pending and has to happen before the case can finish	When Movia rejects a complaint, P2 has to set a new payment deadline
A -><> B (milestone)	B is blocked as long as A is pending	Movia can't send reminders while it still has to decide on a complaint
A ->+ B (include)	A makes B available	A rejection or a reduction makes the appeal form available
A ->% B (exclude)	A takes B away, and excluded activities are ignored by everything	Once the fine is with Gældsstyrelsen, the passenger can't complain to Movia any more

A few things that help when you read the model:

- Dashed boxes start excluded and get included by an earlier step. That's how each phase only opens up when the one before it allows it.
- An activity that excludes itself can only happen once.
- A relation to or from a group box applies to everything inside it.
- A case counts as finished when nothing included is still pending.
- The roles are Passenger (whoever complains, which can also be a parent or someone with a power of attorney), Operator (Movia), Secretariat and Board.

Step by step

1. The complaint

Once a fine has been issued, the passenger can complain to Movia (P3-01). They can do that until Movia hands the fine over to Gældsstyrelsen. After that, complaints go to Gældsstyrelsen instead, which is outside our process (P3-03).

There's only one complaint per fine. If the passenger writes again, it's a reply in the same case, not a new complaint (P3-02). In the model, the "Complaint" group excludes itself after the first complaint, so a second one isn't possible.

The complaint is either a normal one or an identity-misuse one, where someone says the fine was given to another person using their name. Two things can hold Movia back from deciding (P3-04, P3-05, P3-13):

- If someone complains on behalf of another adult, they have to attach a power of attorney first.
- If it's identity misuse, Movia has to handle that claim first. We kept misuse as a single box, so the police report, the documents and the alarm on the person's details are inside it and not modelled.

2. Movia decides

Movia makes exactly one decision: accept, reject or reduce (P3-07). Until it has decided, P2 can't send reminders or transfer the fine (P3-06). That's the milestone from "Operator decision" to "Collection".

- Accept: the fine is cancelled, so the payment part of P2 and the whole appeal part are excluded. The case is done (P3-10).
- Reject: P2 has to set a new payment deadline (P3-09).
- Reduce: P2 has to set the new amount (P3-11).

Reject and reduce are grouped as "Unfavourable decision", because those are the two the passenger can appeal.

3. Appealing to Ankenævnet

The appeal form only becomes available after a reject or a reduce, and not while Movia is still deciding (P3-16).

On the form the passenger enters the disputed amount, and that decides the fee: 160 kr if the amount is 160 kr or more, otherwise 80 kr (P3-21). The model does this with guards on the amount, which is also why the form comes before the fee in our model. The board's guide doesn't actually say which comes first.

The passenger also has to give GDPR consent, so the board can look at things like their Rejsekort data (P3-23). They can take it back later, but then the case is closed. If they're appealing for someone else, they also fill in that person's details (P3-19).

The board only opens the case once the form, the fee and the consent are in, plus the passenger's details if needed (P3-22).

4. The board prepares the case

When the case is opened, three things happen: the secretariat starts preparing it, the board now has to make a decision at some point, and P2 stops collecting again (P3-25).

If the fine was already transferred to Gældsstyrelsen before the appeal, Movia has to take it back (P3-26). That's the "Recall claim" activity. We assumed this has to happen before the board decides. If the appeal fails later, the fine can be transferred again.

While the case is being prepared:

- There has to be at least one party hearing before the case can go to the board, and there can be several rounds (P3-28, P3-29).
- The secretariat can ask for more information. The answer is then pending, and the case can't go to the board until it's been sent (P3-30).
- If there's already a court judgment or a settlement, the secretariat has to reject the case (P3-24).

A case can also stop here without a decision: the passenger withdraws, Movia and the passenger settle, or the secretariat rejects it (P3-31, P3-32). Withdrawing and settling are only possible until the case goes to the board. In all three cases the fee is refunded (P3-33). A settlement also cancels the fine, and Movia pays the board's case fee. After a rejection the passenger can ask the board to look at it, but in our model that request doesn't lead anywhere yet.

5. The board decides

Once the case is sent, the board makes exactly one decision (P3-34). That closes the case, so preparation, revoking consent and the recall are no longer possible.

- Complaint upheld: the fine is cancelled, the passenger gets the fee back, and Movia pays the case fee (P3-33, P3-38).
- Appeal rejected: P2 sets a new payment deadline, and the passenger doesn't get the fee back (P3-41).

6. After the board upholds a complaint

Movia has 30 days to either comply or say it won't follow the decision (P3-39). That's the one timer in the model (P30D). If Movia opts out, the passenger can ask for the case to go to the Competition and Consumer Authority, and the secretariat then has to forward it (P3-40). Going to court, and the public list of companies that don't comply, are outside the model (P3-42, P3-44).
